Raymond Ravelo is Meralco's first-ever Chief Sustainability Officer, appointed in 2020 to lead the company's transformation into a sustainability leader in the energy industry. From day one, he championed the integration of sustainability into Meralco's strategy, operations, and culture.

Raymond organized the Sustainability Office into three core functions: Strategy, which defines Meralco's long-term plans and aspirations; Programs, which drives execution of initiatives focused on the "here and now"; and Reporting, which ensures accountability through ESG disclosures and stakeholder engagement.

Under Raymond's leadership, Meralco launched its overarching sustainability agenda, "Powering the Good Life," anchored on four strategic pillars—Power, Planet, People, and Prosperity—designed to go beyond environmentalism and contribute to a wider set of the UN SDGs.

Raymond likewise spearheaded game-changing programs—Green Mobility (fleet electrification), Race to Zero Waste (waste reduction), #Mbrace (gender diversity and inclusion), Resource Conservation and Efficiency (energy and water efficiency), and Greening the Network (phaseout of non-sustainable compounds in distribution operations). Moreover, he institutionalized corporate-wide sustainability metrics tied to top management decision-making and performance.

Through Raymond's visionary leadership, sustainability is now fully embedded in Meralco's DNA—empowering the company to make meaningful strides toward a brighter future for its customers, communities, and the country.
